ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I would like to acknowledge the kind assistance and professional guidance of my supervisor, Associate Professor Tey Nai Peng, who have facilitated the completion of this research paper. Despite his many commitments, he has always been willing to help at the needed time. I am particularly grateful for his valuable and insightful comments as well as generous support to complete this paper.

I would also like to thank The National Population and Family Development Board, Kuala Lumpur for giving me the permission to use and analyze the 1994 Malaysian Population and Family Survey data. The staffs of NPFDB were extremely helpful and supportive.

My appreciation also goes to my friends and colleagues for their constant push and emotional support.

My special thanks go to my wonderful parents and family for their unfailing support and encouragement.

Last, but not least, my utmost appreciation to my fiancé, Jayabalan, for his encouragement, patience and sacrifice.
