ABSTRACT

This study is an analysis of compound adverbial sentences in the Malay Language. Compound adverbial sentence is one of the three subtypes of the embedded compound sentences in the family of the compound sentence. The analysis in this study is based on the Transformational Generative Grammar framework that uses the Standard Theory Model (1965).

In general, this study can be divided into three parts — background, main topic and conclusion. The background, which comprises two chapters, gives the general information about this study. Chapter One details the background of the study and the purpose it was carried out. Chapter Two touches on the concept of sentences to give a general picture of sentences in the Malay Language. This chapter also describes in detail the Transformational-Generative Grammar that uses the Standard Theory Model (1965).

The main topic of this study is the analysis of compound adverbial sentences including definitions and types of compound adverbial sentence (Chapter Three) and transformational processes that compound adverbial sentences undergo (Chapter Four).

The conclusion -- Chapter Five -- summarises the findings of this study and suggests further studies that could be done on compound adverbial sentence.
