ABSTRACT

The supervision of student teachers by college lecturers is a common practice in teacher preparation in Malaysia. Nonetheless, relatively very little is known about how the lecturers interact and intervene during this process to advise and support the trainee teachers towards their professional development and autonomy. This study investigated how two ESL lecturers enacted their roles as supervisors on four ESL student teachers during a first phase teaching practice.

The data was collected by means of observations, interviews, a questionnaire and from written documents. Two case study content analysis and a cross-case inductive analysis (Patton, 1990) of the data was conducted focusing on the perceptions, views and practice of the supervisors. The findings are presented in the form of case studies.

The findings show that there is a tendency for lecturers to indulge in directive and prescriptive interventions in both supportive and confronting manners, as the students lacked pedagogical skills. In a positive empathetic atmosphere, the interventions produced positive results and in contrast, threatening, evaluative, judgmental and intimidating interventions were counterproductive. Students not owning the discoveries, and the lack of mutually negotiated action plans and an effective monitoring system limited the students' teaching behaviour changes. These imply that lecturers should stick closely to the theoretical underpinnings of clinical supervision and reflective practice as well as create a positive empathetic atmosphere of helping to promote the professional development of student teachers.

ABSTRAK

Penyeliaan guru pelatih oleh pensyarah maktab adalah amalan biasa dalam penyediaan guru di Malaysia. Namun begitu, tidak banyak diketahui tentang bagaimana pensyarah-pensyarah tersebut berinteraksi dan membantu dalam proses ini untuk menasihati dan menyokong guru-guru pelatih tersebut ke arah pembentukan profesionalisme dan autonomi mereka. Kajian ini menyiasat bagaimana dua orang pensyarah ESL melaksanakan peranan mereka sebagai penyelia terhadap empat orang guru pelatih ESL semasa latihan guru fasa satu.

Kumpulan data dibuat dengan cara pemerhatian, temuduga, soal-selidik dan dari dokumen yang bertulis. Dua analisis kandungan secara kajian kes dan satu analisis induktif 'cross-case' (Patton, 1990) yang berfokus kepada persepsi, pandangan dan praktik pensyarah-pensyarah tersebut dibuat. Penyampaian penemuan dibuat secara kajian kes.

Penemuan menunjukkan bahawa terdapat kecenderungan yang tinggi oleh pensyarah-pensyarah untuk membantu secara terus dan preskriptif dengan cara sokongan dan konfrontasi kerana pelatih-pelatih kurang kemahiran pedagogi. Dalam suasana yang positif, bantuan empatetik yang diberi menghasilkan hasil yang positif dan bantuan secara ugutan, penilaian, 'judgmental' and pencelaan yang tidak disenangi menghasilkan sebaliknya. Penemuan yang tidak dimiliki oleh pelatih dan kekurangan rancangan tindakan bersama dan sistem pengawasan yang efektif menghadkan perubahan tingkah laku pengajaran pelajar. Ini menunjukkan bahawa pensyarah harus lebih peka kepada tatacara dan teori-teori dasar penyeliaan klinikal dan amalan reflektif, di samping menyediakan suasana pertolongan yang positif dan empatetik untuk menggalakkan perkembangan profesional guru pelatih.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My sincere and heartfelt thanks to my supervisor Ms Narindar Kaur who guided me patiently throughout this study.

I am indebted to the lecturers and students of MPTAR for allowing me to peek into their practice and also for being very accommodative and co-operative during the interviews and for providing me with the written documents.

My special thanks to Mr Krishnan Mariappan of UPM for allowing me to use his computer and printer, borrow books for me from the UPM library, and also for his technical advice on formatting the text.

Finally, to my dear wife and children, I extend my gratitude and love for tolerating my unpleasant moods when things got tough and stressful.
