event, the rural population of the world is the subject of discussion in one part of the world. Without, especially in the developed world, the rural population has been a neglected area. Since the achievement of World War II, the problems of rural poverty have been regarded as crucial to the development of the world. The Government has not hesitated in giving rural development a high priority in her National Development Plans. The first major objective of the Second Five Year Plan 1961-1965 is "to provide facilities and opportunities for the rural population to improve its standards of economic and social well-being." The Government is devoting a very substantial portion of its development budget for the benefits of the rural population.

The number of fishermen in Malaya has been estimated to be around 54,000 and taking the total population to be approximately 8 million, this forms about 6% which is quite a significant proportion. It is also realised that their economic conditions are characterised by such familiar features of some poverty such as heavy indebtedness, low income, low productivity, and exploitation that without substantial financial assistance from the State there is no hope for them to extricate themselves from their present position of poverty and misery. In addition, fishing has never been a profitable occupation in this country and consequently, there is a shortage of capital for its development. Under such circumstances, it becomes imperative that the provision of financial aid by the Government appears to be the only sensible way by which these fishermen can ever hope to better themselves.

As a result, the Government of the Federation of Malaya has embarked upon several elaborate fishing aid schemes with the primary aim of raising the social and economic well-being of the fishing community. At the time of writing of this "Exercise Exercise", there are several such schemes in operation in various parts of this country but most unfortunately, few proved to have been successful. It is the task of this "Exercise" to examine critically and appraise one of these schemes.

An attempt is made to critically appraise the Kuala Linggi Fishermen Resettlement Scheme which is the first of its kind that has been launched by the Ministry of Agriculture and Co-operatives, Malaya. It is hoped that the final outcome of this "Exercise" will bring to light not only the special problems that the Scheme is facing but also the approach to be adopted in the solution of these problems.

The task of collecting material of this nature is necessarily beset with numerous problems. The lack of literature on this topic in the past 2 decades, apart from an historical development of this country is unfortunately limited and available only in the form of the old water tables for the field. In this respect, I was most fortunate, however, to have a large part of the materials which this "Exercise" is based on obtained from various confidential reports and monthly progress reports which were made available to me by the General Ministry of Agriculture and Co-operatives, Malaysia. The rest of the materials were obtained during a field trip to the site of the Scheme itself. I was equally fortunate that I managed to take several beautiful photographs at the resettlement site, some of which were carefully selected for illustration.

A few words of explanation may usefully be included here about certain terms employed throughout this "Exercise". The term "Scheme" will be used to denote the Kuala Linggi Fishermen Resettlement Scheme, at Kempong Nelayan Kuala Linggi, Malacca, and the term "Society" will be used to mean The Kuala Linggi Fishermen Co-operative Credit and Marketing Society Unlimited. "Members" will be employed to refer to those fishermen who joined the Kuala Linggi Fishermen Co-operative Credit and Marketing Society Unlimited and who received loans as well as enjoyed (and still enjoy) all the facilities provided by the Scheme.

I wish to record my profound gratitude to the Ministry of Agriculture and Co-operatives, Malaysia, for having given me full co-operation as well as having made all necessary arrangements to enable me to write this "Exercise".

I wish to express my thanks to Puteh Abdul Aziz bin Yassin, the Principal Assistant Secretary, Planning and Research Section, Ministry of Agriculture and Co-operatives, Malaysia, for his invaluable aids and suggestions. I have also benefitted from discussions with many officials of the Ministry, among whom I especially wish to thank Mr. Low Man Kim, the Marketing Research Officer and Mr. Ling Hsing Sing, the Chief Co-operative Marketing Officer.

Finally, I am very much indebted to Professor U.A. Aziz, Head of the Department of Economics, Mr. M. Hughes and Professor R. Collins, both visiting professors, Department of Economics, University of Malaya, Kuala Lumpur, for their guidance and support.
